Market Review, Outlook & Strategy relevant to Target Fund

Global equity markets rebounded strongly in January after sell-offs in December, despite a 35-day government shutdown in US and lukewarm European economy. Asian equities also benefited from waning USD strength amid a shift in tone by the US Federal Reserve and continuous fund inflows, especially within the passive space. Regional fixed income markets saw a rally in January amid dovish global central banks, flat treasury yield curves and strong demand for primary issuances. China unveiled its bill swap mechanism which allows eligible financial institutions to swap commercial bank perpetual debts for central bank bills to shore up liquidity and encourage bank lending, resulting a spike in prices of Additional Tier 1 Capital (AT1). Asian currency strengthened against the greenback in the month as sentiments saw signs of turning, led by Chinese Yuan, Thai Baht and Indonesia Rupiah.

2019 has started with a relief rally in global markets. Sustainability of the rally will require a stabilization in macro data and corporate earnings. Further stimulus efforts from China and a friendlier US-China relations would be positive for sentiments. However, we are mindful of the challenges that remain, with slowing global growth, corporate earnings that are still expected to be revised downwards, a still fragile US-China relations, and shrinking liquidity. We would ride the rally for now and would look to take profits when valuations are no longer attractive and the macro environment deteriorates further. Focus will be on developments in the US economy to gauge if the Fed will have to change its interest rates trajectory. Markets are currently pricing in a dovish Fed going forward. We will look to take profit on some holdings following the bond rally, and will look to deploy the cash into upcoming new issuances. Duration will still be kept short at around 3 years, though we look to gradually extend duration heading into 2H2019. Amidst continuing uncertainties globally, we continue to focus on quality and liquidity, with prudent bottom up credit selection.
